

In today's corporate world appearance is everything. Where your company is located, its building, its interior design and furniture. A most important area in your company, however, is the boardroom where many critical business decisions are made. The boardroom and boardroom furniture reflect the corporate personality and the company's overall image. It also sets the tone, even the right mood reflecting the important agenda items. To give the right signal to your clients and business partners, it is essential to choose the boardroom furniture that portrays your own corporate image. Meeting a client in the boardroom, one of the first things he will immediately notice is the appearance of your office – its design, its style, its orderliness, and its personality.

The corporate boardroom furniture says a lot about the company, that is, it sets the tone for many types of corporate interactions both with internal colleagues and visiting business personnel. But today's businesses are facing major challenges, and space is a major one. As such, many companies do not regard boardrooms as a single-use area, they are trying to maximize available space and the functionality of the boardroom becomes increasingly important.

Today, functionality is key in corporate boardrooms. Multimedia products are often the most sought after furniture pieces in boardrooms. Multimedia lecterns, teleconferencing units are the sine qua non, as such multimedia lecterns serve as multimedia hubs that connect portable media devices like DVD players and laptops just to name a few examples.

Multimedia storage furniture is another crucial boardroom furniture. It is a terrific solution for today's businesses, as companies often have a number of delicate and expensive equipment to store.

Another essential element in the boardroom is, without question, the conference room table. It is most often one of the furniture pieces of boardroom furniture which is bought individually. A boardroom table can have many forms, shapes, colors and even functions. Tables can range from 6 to 30 + feet long. You can choose from many alternatives, you can either go with a big, bold oval table or a round one. It all depends on your needs, that is, how many people will be using it?; for what purposes you will be using it? Buy large enough tables to meet not only present, but future needs as well. The table makes a big statement and it should be the dominant piece of this all important room.

Boardroom conference tables come standard in five designer finishes of Cherry, Mahogany, Anigre, Maple, Walnut and Dark Walnut. There are also the favorite high-end laminate finishes and veneered wood conference tables.

Another important issue you need to consider in choosing your boardroom table is the color. It is as important as the shape, form, and dimensions. Select shades that do not accumulate or show dirt and dust easily. If you have constant maintenance in the office, you can go for light shades. However, from an interior design point of view, you always need to make sure that the boardroom table that you choose can blend with the surroundings, such as the colors of your walls, floor and other furniture in the workspace, and suiting the level of formality required in your boardroom meetings.

You can also choose other options or features of your boardroom tables. There are options for flip, folding or fixed modular types. At MAiSPACE, we also offer modular boardroom tables that allow easy reconfiguration and transformation of your conference area to accommodate multiple functions. Find out which one of these is best for you.

The boardroom furniture reflects the business personality and the company's overall image. As such, design the boardroom wisely. Usually, boardroom furniture can be found in a single package. But if you are like most buyers of boardroom furniture, you might be presented with a situation where you are about to buy a single piece of boardroom furniture to complement an already-existing set in your office. Bottom line, maintain the important objectives of the board room in terms of what goes on in there, who it goes on with, and what is the right tone and mood for these activities.
