

The old office is dead, so is one size fits all office furniture. Diversity is the key in the workspace. The old steel cabinets, and sterile and antiseptic cubicles are outmoded. Today, manufacturers, interior architects and designers are competing to introduce new products that reflect the changes in the economy, technology and the way we perceive work.

The idea is to accommodate the evolving needs of individuals and businesses to increase performance and productivity. Human-centered approach to interior office design is on the rise. Robert Propst, the inventor of the office cubicle, believed that the facility should adapt to the needs of the individuals, and there could be a variety of forms of adaptation.

Today, interior office design is based on the principles of efficiency, harmony, aesthetics, and functionality. The new office furniture products are flexible, ergonomic, stylish, and functional. To maximize performance and productivity, today's manufactures are constantly working on new designs.

At MaispaceMAiSPACE, we adopt a subject oriented approach to interior office design; whether it's 2 or 2000 workstations each customer receives our undivided attention. We listen to the individuals and businesses and seek to meet their needs and demands to the greatest extent. We customize ~~their~~ workspace according to ~~their~~ work habits and create workstations that ~~are embracing~~ embrace employees.
